This report is a tool to help practitioners, policymakers and the public understand the complex place-based factors that shape opportunity pathways and outcomes at a local level.

The data in this report come from a wide array of third-party providers, and links to data sources are available throughout. What is Opportunity?

Opportunity is the set of circumstances or pathways that make it possible for people to achieve their goals—no matter their starting point. At Enterprise, we believe that all people should be able to live in communities in which the available pathways lead to positive outcomes—housing stability, education, health & well-being, economic security and mobility. These are the outcomes we strive to achieve every day for ourselves, our friends and families, and the broader communities in which we live.

Opportunity360 offers a framework for measuring opportunity at a neighborhood level using more than 150 data indicators from both public and proprietary sources.

To help you tell the story of opportunity in your neighborhood, we created index values for each opportunity outcome. The snapshot below illustrates how the values for your census tract compare to all other tracts in the nation. A score of 50 means the tract is in the 50th percentile—half of all tracts in the country have higher scores and half have lower scores. The region and state scores reflect the percentile ranking of the selected tract as compared to all other tracts within those areas.

What Are the Pathways That Drive Opportunity?

For Census Tract: 13.02 County: Santa Fe, NM
 City: Santa Fe

Success no longer relies solely on individual motivation and work ethic. We may have the same goals in life, but not the same opportunities—and where you live affects the life you have.

The previous section discussed opportunity outcomes. This section discusses the pathways that make it possible for people to achieve those outcomes. These pathways exist at multiple levels and are shaped by interactions between people and their homes, their neighborhoods, and the policies and systems that affect them.

POLICIES AND SYSTEMS MATTER

Good policy and efficient, well-designed systems can help create, widen and shape a person's pathway to opportunity. For example, housing and mortgage markets shape the number and type of homes available in a neighborhood, as well as their affordability. Similarly, changes to national health policy can affect the marketplace, which in turn can affect the availability of health care. A first step in promoting opportunity is to understand how our systems and policies affect the outcomes of low-income people.

NEIGHBORHOODS AND NETWORKS MATTER

Neighborhoods represent a critical pathway to opportunity. They determine the schools children attend and access to amenities and services. A neighborhood's proximity to environmental hazards can affect residents' health and well-being. Collectively, these factors have an enormous impact on the outcomes that people are able to—and likely will—achieve.

We assess neighborhood pathways based on the latest research, which suggests that four factors matter most: the accessibility of goods, services and jobs; the physical environment and safety of a neighborhood; social capital, networks and support; and the quality of community institutions, most notably schools.

HOMES AND BUILDINGS MATTER

The quality, design and affordability of homes can directly impact the well-being of those living within them. For example, homes with peeling lead paint or a leaking roof can present serious health hazards to those living within them. On the other hand, a safe and affordable home frees up more income to pay for healthy food, proper health care and other necessities. In this way, a safe and stable home is an essential foundation for opportunity, while an unsafe or high-cost home may create significant barriers to achieving desired outcomes.

PEOPLE MATTER

Access to opportunity depends on individual circumstances and physical, mental, and emotional capacity. For example, a person with a disability may face difficulty obtaining certain jobs; an individual with considerable savings will find it easier to purchase a home; and a senior citizen may face mobility challenges. These and many other personal characteristics and situations come together to determine what pathways a person can access.

The next section of the report provides more detailed data for each of these levels. In addition, the opportunity pathways that exist at a neighborhood level are so critical to an individual's opportunity outcomes, the report examines those pathways in greater detail and provides index values for four pathways that exist within a neighborhood: accessibility of jobs, goods & services; social cohesion; environment; and community institutions.

Community Institutions

Index Value: 22

Local community institutions — most notably schools and health care providers — can have a profound effect on the life outcomes of residents. Education is a primary way that people access opportunities like jobs, and the quality of local schools can be either a springboard toward long-term success or a significant obstacle that must be surmounted. Similarly, strong health care institutions can improve health outcomes and quality of life for the communities they serve.

BUILDINGS, HOMES & MORTGAGE MARKETS

Housing Market

The housing market affects the accessibility of a given neighborhood through the affordability and availability of the local housing stock. Housing availability is measured by how well the supply of affordable housing meets demand, as indicated by the availability gap for low-income renters, the share of households receiving subsidies, and vacancy rates. Indicators in this section also capture the pace and direction of neighborhood change over time, through the number of building permits and changes in home values and rents.

Housing Stability

Metrics pertaining to housing stability measure the ability of residents to maintain their home without being forced to move due to unaffordable housing. High costs and instability negatively impact families, particularly children. For example, frequent moves early in life have been shown to contribute to significant lags in academic achievement.

A Continuum of Care is a local or regional group that plans and organizes coordinated housing and services for the homeless. In the local Continuum of Care area, there are:

Age & Family Structure

Age and family structure can have a significant impact on the opportunities available to individuals, as well as shape their needs and goals. For example, a family with children may rely on the availability of low-cost child care, while accessible public transit and health services may be the primary concern for seniors.

Race & Ethnicity

Race can have a profound effect on a person's available pathways to opportunity, especially when explicit discrimination or hidden biases shape the jobs that may be available, interactions with authorities, and treatment within community institutions. Racial or ethnic identity and de facto housing segregation can also affect a resident's social networks and contacts, affecting the jobs, services and supports that they can reach.

Income & Poverty

Incomes and poverty status can have a long-term impact on life outcomes - limiting a resident's ability to own a home, to purchase needed medication, to buy a suit for a job interview, or even provide food for their family. These hardships can also have an intergenerational effect that can affect their children's outcomes for many years to come.
